

LONDON PUB REVIEWS

London Pub Reviews is a truly unique collection of stories, all set within actual London pubs. Informative, enlightening, and somewhat surreal, the stories follow one man's love of ale, and the bizarre experiences he encounters as he enjoys a pint or two around London. Paul Ewen was born and raised in New Zealand. Although wanting to follow...

Reader's Opinions

This looks at first as though it is part of that great category of books, the pub guide. However this one diverges from the universal start point of a drinker reviewing a pub by sitting in it and having a beer; sadly this is not the kind of person who should be drinking beer (possibly) as his behaviour from then on becomes surreal....

Not what you think. This isn't a serious collection of reviews (although each one does list the address and nearest tube station) - but then, that's pretty clear from lines like: "Jerk Chicken was advertised as a Special on a blackboard alongside this, reminding me of the many names I had been called in my formative years, including..."
