Peek Inside the Book

The majority do not desire the world knowing on some primitive level that it disappoints. They are quite content to let the blind few pursue their path to wisdom. And to watch those trapped by genius forced to sacrifice themselves, and those trapped by talent to emulate them. Much better to be in the...

Reader's Opinions

Two women raised as sisters, but the true born one, Ruth, is obsessed and consumed with jealousy for the older of the two girls, Elizabeth, a cousin who was orphaned and taken in by her mother's sister. Elizabeth is well loved, sweet, kind, and always seems to come out on top. Ruth wants everything her "sister"...

Josephine Hart, like Pat Barker, writes about dark emotions and drives that shape the lives of not only her protagonists (if one can find a true protagonist in her novels) but their families. I am in awe of her talent. Minimalist prose (she makes Hemingway look like Dickens...) is the perfect frame for these explorations of the darkest...
